He is mild, courteous and humane towards his patients. He is vigilant and untiring in his efforts to supply their every want. He is true to the physician or surgeon who may be in attendance. He carries out the treatment prescribed to the very letter. When the physician or surgeon returns, after being absent for a time, Mr. Farnham gives him an accurate account of all that has been done and the results. This is just and honorable towards all parties. Mr. Farnham is a blessing to his race and is doing great good to suffering humanity. BEACONSFIELD'S EPIGRAMS.

FROM HIS LATEST NOVEL, "ENDYMION."

Let us cross the street and get into St. James's place—that is always my idea of solitude.

The salvation of Europe is the affair of a past generation; the salvation of England should be the subject rather of our present thoughts.

—that increasing feeling of terror and despair which was deemed necessary to the advancement of Conservative opinions.

"One should never think of death. Think of life—that is real piety."

"Turtle makes all men equal."

"Now, I dare say that Ambrosia or has been bidding all his life, and yet there is something in that star and ribbon; I do not know how you feel, but I could almost go down on my knees to him. And there is a Cabinet minister—well, we know what he is. I have been snubbing him for these two years, and now that I meet him I feel like a snob. I believe them to be all impostors, but still it is pleasant to talk to a man with a star."

"A Public man is responsible, and a responsible man is a slave. It is private life that governs the world. The world talks much of powerful sovereigns, and great ministers, and if being talked about made one powerful they would be irresistible. But the fact is, the more you are talked about, the less powerful you are."

"All lawyers are loose in their youth, but an Indian country, subject to fogs, and with a powerful middle class, requires grave statesmen."

"My return," said Prince Florestan, "was the natural development of the irresistible principle of historical necessities."

"What is original necessarily lacks originality. A country that borrows its language, its laws and its religion cannot have its inventive powers much developed."

—that hot-comb, they call a wedding breakfast, which celebrates the triumph of a rival.

"Everything in this world depends upon will. Will is everything in this world depends upon woman." "It is the same thing."

It is since the depths of religious thought have been probed and the influence of woman in the spread and sustenance of religious feeling has again been recognized, that fascinating and fashionable prelates have become favored guests in the refined saloons of the mighty, and while apparently indulging in the vanities of the hour have re-established the influence which in old days guided a Matilda or the mother of Constantine.

"You must tell him, Berengaria, that he can come and dine here whenever he likes in boots. It is a settled thing that M. P.'s may dine in boots."

"A little knowledge of the world is a very dangerous thing, especially in literature."

"Foreigners rarely know more than one English minister at a time, but they compensate for their ignorance of the aggregate body by even exaggerating the qualities of the individual with whom they are acquainted."

"The only use of being in opposition is that we may be by ourselves."

"All things change, and quoting Virgil will be the next thing to disappear. In the last Parliament we often had Latin quotations, but never from a member with a new constituency. I have heard Greek quoted here, but that was long ago, and a great mistake—the House was quite alarmed."

"London is deficient in dining capability."

When a nation is thoroughly perplexed and dispirited they soon come to make distinctions between political parties. The country is out of sorts and the government is held answerable for the disorder.

"Sensible men are all of the same religion." "And what is that?" "Sensible men never tell."

"Great men should think of Opportunity and not of Time. Time is the excuse of feeble and puzzled spirits."

"Every political party changes its principles on an average once in ten years."

—A species of rhapsodical rhetoric, highly useful in troubled times, when there is no real business to transact and when there is nobody to transact it.

"Dynasties are unpopular, especially new ones. The present age is monarchical, but not dynastic."

"You prefer show that democracy is aristocracy in disguise and that aristocracy is democracy in disguise. I will carry you through everything. That is the charm of a principle—you have always an answer ready."

"It will be private life I care, and that is the notion the British public want now."—New York Herald.

THURSDAY, DEC. 23, 1880.

A SHREWD DEMOCRATIC TRAP LABELLED CIVIL SERVICE REFORM.

From various sources the indications are cumulative that the defeated Democracy are contriveng a scheme to take advantage of President Hayes' monomania on the subject of "civil service reform." To all who have kept the run of the general tendency of the appointments to Federal office in Washington and throughout the country during some years past, it is a familiar fact that a great army of ex-rebel Democrats of the most virulent type have been quietly pushed into the various departments and into important and minor offices throughout the country and especially in the South, until to-day the followers of the Lost Cause are drawing pay by battalions in every branch of the civil service.

If Hancock had won, this army of Bourbon office-holders would have been promptly reinforced by wholesale appointment of Democrats in place of Republicans. As Garfield is elected the Democratic managers would be glad to secure the retention of the large number of Democrats now in office.

Their method of accomplishing this is more than amusing. All at once we find such hack politicians as Pendleton, of Ohio, and Wallace, of Pennsylvania, manifesting the utmost interest in the President's "civil service reform" theories, and we are informed that the Democrats, with their majority in both branches, propose to steal a march on the Republicans by passing a "civil service reform" bill at this session. The main object and feature of the bill will be provision against removals and for the security of the tenure of the thousands of Democratic department clerks, District Attorneys, United States Marshals, Customs officers, postmasters, etc., appointed at the request of the Hamptons, Butlers, Hills and Gordons during the era of conciliation. The Federal service in the South has become so controlled by this class of incumbents that the moonshiners defy the Government, and the right of suffrage is made a mockery. That is what the Democrats want to continue, and they hope to accomplish it by an adroit use of the catch-words of "civil service reform."

They argue that President Hayes has said and written so much platitude on the subject that he will feel obliged to approve a civil service reform measure, and they wink at each other and chuckle over the prospect that they will claim the credit of establishing the "reform," while its real effect will only be to keep their friends in snug berths, and if the Democrats should ever obtain the administration they could and would revive the Jacksonian system within twenty-four hours after their President should take the oath of office.

The Democratic game is obvious, to all intelligent observers. It remains to be seen whether President Hayes can be wheedled into helping the Democrats fasten an army of their pestiferous tools upon the administration of General Garfield.

Plaisted and his Body-Guard.

The Fusion organ in this city has recently manifested so much pride in declaring that the Fusion campaign was made on the State Steal issue and that every vote of its party was cast as an indorsement and vindication of the villany of Garcelon, Pillsbury, Foster & Co., that we have thought it might be pleased to gaze upon its heroes in the grand historical grouping of Plaisted and his body-guard which we present on our first page to-day.

The full significance of the claim that the crimes of Garcelon and his gang have been adopted and glorified by Plaisted and his party could not be more graphically delineated than it has been by the skilful pencil of Mr. Coombs in the cartoon which we publish. A glance at the features of the State Sealers is enough to cause every respectable citizen to echo the Honest Farmer's opinion of the appropriate destination of such a load.

NATIONAL BANK PROFITS.

THE DEMAGOGUE'S STATEMENT.

"By as skillful a piece of financial jugglery as was ever consummated, they [the national banks] secure interest on their capital twice over. They get interest on that which is deposited with the Government as well as on the notes which are loaned to the people."—Commercial, Dec. 22d.

THE FACTS SHOWN BY THE OFFICIAL STATISTICS.

The national banks have only $321,369,400 outstanding circulation, when they have bonds deposited that would warrant a circulation of $391,087,770. The fact that the circulation is $69,000,000 less than it might be if they took all the bills that their bonds held for security will warrant, is proof that the profits of circulation are of little consequence. Indeed, Comptroller Knox shows that the profits of circulation but one and seven-tenths per cent. upon 4 per cent. bonds when the rate of interest is not higher than 6 per cent.—Lewiston Journal.

Verily wisdom crieth in the wilderness. Here is the Atlanta Constitution squarely backing up the position that the electoral vote of Georgia ought not to be counted. It says: "It is undoubtedly a serious matter that a State should, under any circumstances be deprived of its vote, but to count it unlawfully is more serious still. The alleged statute under which the electoral vote of the State was cast is a nullity. It has no legal existence. The Constitution of the United States confers upon Congress the power and authority to regulate the day, and any State law in conflict with the law of Congress on the subject is inoperative. It is the duty of the States to conform to the requirements of the laws of the United States in this respect. These laws provide that the electoral vote of each State shall be cast on the first Wednesday in December; and if, through neglect or carelessness, the electoral vote of any State is not cast on that day, it cannot be legally cast at all."—Tribune.

The coolness with which the Commercial commits the petty forgery of pretending to quote from the THE WHIG and to arraign it for a string of the Fusion sheet's own stupid utterances, is only equalled by the glee with which it parades itself as the special champion of the rum-shops. There is nothing new in the relative position of the two papers, except that under the influence of Bass the Central street organ has become more and more unscrupulously the pander to every form of vice.

THE ELECTRIC LIGHT.

TWELVE BLOCKS ON BROADWAY, NEW YORK, ILLUMINATED.

[From the N. Y. Tribune, Dec. 21.]

Broadway was illuminated from Fourteenth street to Twenty-sixth street last night by the Brush electric lights. At exactly twenty-seven and a half minutes past five the engineer started the Corliss engine at No. 133 West Twenty-fifth street, the armatures of one of the generating machines began to revolve, and almost instantaneously the fifteen lamps in Broadway flashed out into light. The street was crowded with people coming up town, and the novel sight attracted much attention. Groups of men gathered about the posts staring with upturned faces at the lamps, which proved a strong enough attraction to detain them even from their dinners. At a quarter of six the gas was turned off from the street lamps. The electric lights were then seen to better advantage. Under each lamp was a shadow comparatively dark, caused by the rims of ground glass on the globes. Across the street stretched long, narrow shadows of the bars of the framework inclosing the globes. The gas in the shop windows looked somewhat dim. Near each lamp seen against a dark back ground, a cloud of minute particles of dust in the air could be distinctly seen. Fine rays of light seemed to shoot out in every direction. The lights were remarkable for their steadiness, but they seemed too widely scattered, and somewhat dim. No flickering whatever was perceptible. The flickering seen caused by the fact that some of the lamps were tilted on one side owing to some improper adjustment of the apparatus. But previous to the exhibition last night, R. J. Sheehy, general superintendent of the company, had carefully examined the details of the circuit and remedied all defects.

About 7 o'clock the street lamps were turned on again and gas and electricity entered into competition. The electric lamps were 262 feet apart. Half way between them it was possible to read a newspaper. Passers-by cast black, clearly-defined shadows. These were perceptible even when they passed directly underneath the lights. The gas lampposts cast long shadows when contrasted with the electric lights. Between Fifth avenue and Broadway, at Twenty-third street, is a powerful Gregg burner, with a reflector. This consumes forty feet of gas in an hour. The sixteen gas-lights on the two posts before the Fifth Avenue Hotel were turned off and on each post was an electric light. The brilliancy of the one nearest Fifth-ave. and Twenty-third-st. was so great that the post bearing the Gregg burner cast a clearly defined shadow. Each of the electric lights is estimated at 2,000 candle power supposing the full force of the light to be concentrated in one point. Taking any one of eight different directions in which the light is thrown it would be estimated at from 1,200 to 1,500 candle power.

The Broadway circuit, comprising sixteen lamps, fifteen in the street and one at the central station, was supplied by one dynamo-electric machine. In this circuit there were 10,000 feet of wire. The machine offered a resistance of ten ohms, and each lamp a resistance of about four and five-eighths ohms. The total resistance on the circuit, including ten ohms for this wire, was about seventy-five ohms. A second machine at the central station supplied a second circuit of seventeen lamps; the twin of these were placed on the floor of the station giving out a dazzling brilliancy that attracted hosts of small boys to the doors and windows. The other four lit up the armory of the 5th Regiment, in Twenty-third-st., in which a fair was going on. The hall seemed even brighter than it would be in full daylight. Between half-past 7 and half-past 8 the faces of the throngs that filled Broadway on their way to places of amusement could be distinctly identified at considerable distances. The lamps were intended to burn all night. The cost of the carbons is a cent an hour, but no definite information is given as to total expense of keeping the lights. This exhibition, which is to continue for a month, is intended to determine the question of expense as well as to familiarize the public with the light.

A PARTIAL CONFESSION.

[From the Charleston News and Courier (Dem.)]

The "State Executive Committee of the Union Republican party of South Carolina," alias Mr. E. W. M. Mackey, has published an address "detailing the frauds, violence and intimidation by which South Carolina was carried for Hancock. We have not hesitated to admit that there was irregular action in particular places, and we can, therefore, with the better grace condemn Mr. Mackey's production as the most shameful and shameless political document ever given to the public by any politician in or from South Carolina. It brands the whole people of the State as bulldozers, cheats and murderers.

We said yesterday that the Democrats would attempt to get the Fitz John Porter bill passed along with the Grant bill by pooling the issues, as it were. The Senate debate yesterday showed this to be the scheme intended. We hope it won't succeed. If Grant cannot be restored to the Army for his distinguished services without at the same time restoring a man who was dismissed from the Army as a traitor, let him remain a civilian during the balance of his days.—St. Louis Globe.

Will the Boston Post please take a "sweet-tempered" look at the galaxy on our first page and say whether it is proud of the boast that every Democratic voter in Maine endorsed the Garcelon infamy!

Three Houses Burned at Auburn.

LEWISTON, Dec. 22. This morning fire was discovered in the dwelling of Thomas Lebanton, near Barker Mill, Auburn. It extended to the house of Geo. Lane, and two owned by John Auger. All but one of the latter were totally consumed. Loss, probably, $6,000. Lebanton had $1,200 insurance in the Worcester. Auger had $900 in the Peoples and $500 in the Merchants. Lane had $400. The houses were occupied by eleven families.

HONORING THE PILGRIMS.

New England Dinner in New York.

PERTINENT SPEECH BY GEN. GRANT.

The General's Opinion of Carpet-baggers.

NEW YORK, Dec. 22. At the New England dinner in Brooklyn, last night, Gen. Grant was received with cheers, and spoke as follows:

I am afraid that you are going to be a good deal disappointed, but there is one thing in which you will not be disappointed, for I shall not detain you long. We have heard from our President and also from the President of the United States the same eulogy of the Pilgrims and people of New England, and I subscribe to all the President has said, and I will say a little more. We have heard a great deal in our country about carpet-baggers, and at times it was almost a word of reproach. I

New Englanders believe that when a man is a citizen of one State he is a citizen of the United States, and that he has a right to go into any portion of the country with all the rights that he had at the place of starting. [Cheers.] In our Southern States, particularly in the northwest, we have seen the effect of the carpet-bagger in his manifestation of the feeling of equality with the native born citizen. We have seen elegant cities springing up even in the time of the youngest of those present. We have seen property brought over the prairie, where there was nothing but what nature had planted, and all this has been the work of carpet-baggers, and the principles of the people who formed this society.

Without any reflection upon any other portion of the country, there would have been much greater prosperity, much greater contentment, if these carpet baggers had been received in the same way elsewhere as they had been received in the North west. [Applause.]

In fact I have almost come to the conclusion that there is very little progress or advancement in a community made entirely of natives by that community.—[Laughter.] They require a little stirring up, a little probing, and the going away from the place of one's nativity to bring out one's best energies. You may take it that this is the case in this city or in the suburbs across the river. [Laughter.]

Wherever you look, although you may find very excellent representatives of their sires among them, continuing their business faithfully and successfully, yet you find nothing else, and nothing that is new; any new enterprise except that which has been started by new people. So I am decidedly in favor of the principles of New Englanders. They obey the laws wherever they go; respect the rights of others, and urge the rights of free and full enjoyment of their political and religious liberties; making no distinction on account of personal nativity.

Your president has asked one question to which he seems to expect an answer. He said: "Wherever the pilgrim went,—and where did he not go?" That question I cannot answer. [Laughter.] My travels have been confined to the Northern Hemisphere. I have not been to the equator, but I have been very near to it, and I have not been in any place where he was not or has not been. [Laughter and applause.]

Secretary Evarts also spoke at the Brooklyn dinner last night. He concluded as follows:

It is a wonderful spectacle after the dire calamity of civil war, that in seventeen years, the nation is more homogeneous, more bound together, more powerful, richer than it ever could have been, but for the triumph of the best over the worst. [Cheers.]

FORTY-SIXTH CONGRESS.—Third Session.

Senate.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 22.

Notwithstanding Mr. Edmunds' objection on account of the absence of a quorum and the necessity for an executive session, the Senate on motion of Mr. Morgan took up the resolution offered by him in June last, declaring the President of the Senate not constitutionally authorized to count the Electoral vote, or to determine what votes shall be received and be counted or what rejected.

Mr. Morgan spoke at length in support of his resolution.

The resolution was not acted upon and the Senate went into Executive session. The door reopened at 2 P. M. and Mr. Booth introduced a bill to incorporate the Maritime Canal Co. of Nicaragua.

The bill for the relief of settlers on restored lands passed.

The bill relating to survey and disposal of unsurveyed lands on Keys and Islands belonging to the United States was placed on the calendar.

The Senate at 4.30 adjourned to January 5th.

House

Immediately after the reading of the journal Mr. McLane presented a question affecting the dignity of the House and called attention to the scene of disorder which took place on the floor yesterday, and which he characterized as offensive, derogatory and discreditable to the House as a parliamentary body. He called on both the offending members before any other business was entered on, to relieve themselves of that offense by an ample apology.

No response having been made by either of the members immediately concerned, Mr Bowman denounced the scene of yesterday as a crime and as an insult offered to the House, to Congress and to the country.

Mr. McLane insisted on his question of privilege and offered a resolution requiring the offending members to apologize to the House.

The word "permitted" was substituted for "required" in Mr. McLane's resolution.

An opportunity being given Messrs. Sparks and Weaver made ample personal apologies to the House and the whole matter was laid on the table.

The House at 2.35 adjourned to January 5th.

He was not fit for business, and carried his life like a burden on his back. Just then his friend, Capt. Handy, said: "Ass, why don't you send to Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. We learn that James Redpath, who travelled through Ireland last winter as correspondent of the New York Tribune, will lecture in Norombega Hall early in January, on the Irish Land troubles. Mr. Redpath is an experienced observer and his discussion of the topic now attracting so much attention cannot fail to be of interest.

Col. Thayer and wife of the Penobscot Exchange, and Mr. Russ Powers, of Bangor, passed through the city Tuesday, on their way to Rockport, where they will attend the wedding of Col. Thayer's son, Mr. A. W. Thayer, to Miss Carleton, one of Rockport's fairest daughters. Mr. Thayer is well known in Augusta.—Kennebec Journal.

ASSEMBLY. A small but very pleasant party attended the select assembly at Music Hall last evening. The first of the evening was devoted principally to square dances, and after intermission, during which Mr. Johnson furnished refreshments, came the German. Andrews' Orchestra furnished excellent music and the evening proved a very enjoyable one.

SUDDEN DISAPPEARANCE. We learn that parties arrived in the city yesterday from York county in search of a man alleged to be insane. It is reported that this man was discharged from the Asylum not long since and has again become insane. When these gentlemen arrived in the city they found the man at the Franklin House and talked with him, but he managed to give them the slip and has disappeared from the city.

HYMENEAL. Mr. J. Walker Donald, the traveling agent of the Grand Trunk Railroad, was married, yesterday, at the residence of Charles Hood, 46 Date street, Boston Highlands, to Miss Mary Martyn, daughter of Geo. Martyn, Esq., of St. John. The bridgroom is a son of the late Rev. Dr. Donald, of St. John, N. B. The marriage ceremony was performed by Rev. W. Brenton Greene. Many beautiful presents testified to the love and esteem in which the bride is held. After a short tour the happy couple will make their home in Bangor where Mr. Donald's headquarters for business are established.

THE EXECUTIVE COUNCIL. The stars and stripes float over the State House, and the Governor and Council are busy closing up the business of the year, of which there is a large batch. Hearings have been given on several pardon cases, and the petitioners were granted leave to withdraw. The Standing Committee on State Prisons and Pardons, to whom was referred the petition of Redington J. Kennaston and Melzyer E. Kennaston, both of Kennebec county, for a remission of a fine of $100, part of a sentence imposed on them by the Superior Court, at the September term, were granted leave to withdraw.

A SMART OLD GENTLEMAN. Upon the farm of Davis Lumbert, Esq., on the Six Mile Falls road, leading out of this city, is a wood lot where a crew of men are chopping cord wood. Among the number is Mr. Roberts, an active, smart man, over seventy-eight years old, who has cut twenty-five cords of wood within the last thirty days. He is the first man out in the morning and the last in at night. He is not obliged to perform this hard labor to obtain a livelyhood, as he is amply able to live without work, but prefers this active, useful life, believing it conducive to health, happiness and a long life. As soon as he finishes his contract he intends to visit his mother who resides in the western part of this State and is one hundred and three years old.

THAT TINKER. The eccentric traveling tinker, respecting whom we recently published an item according to the Kennebec Journal is a native of Thetford, Vermont, a graduate of Darmoth College, with a family of grown up sons in good circumstances, who are willing to give him a comfortable home. Years ago his wife joined the dormons. First he became a hermit; selected a site for a cabin in the forest, high up on the sides of the Green Mountains, and made brackets for a livelihood. One day he started toward the sunrise and has made Maine his home ever since. At one time he was slightly insane and was confined as a patient in the hospital in Augusta.

HINDOO MATINEE. The ladies and little folks will be pleased to learn that it has been decided by the management to give a matinee on Friday afternoon, commencing at three o'clock. The beautiful views of the scenery and people of India will be shown, and the Hindoo Jugglers and snake-charmers will do their marvelous tricks. In fact the whole performance will be given the same as in the evening. This will afford a good opportunity to give the children a pleasant afternoon during the festive holiday season, and it will also give those, who, on account of other engagements, cannot attend in the evening, a chance to see these people who may never visit this country again. Tickets for the matinee, at the advertised prices, may now be obtained at Bugbee's. Reserved seats for the evening exhibition are on sale at the same place.

The Week of Prayer.

The week of prayer in 1881 begins on the 2d of January and ends on Sunday following. In accordance with the custom which it has followed during several years past, the Evangelical Alliance has suggested a programme for the week, and the same, with some slight modifications, has been adopted by the Branch Alliances of the United States. The following is the modified programme:

January 2d.—Theme: Christ the only hope of a lost world.

Monday, 3d.—Thanksgiving for the blessings, temporal and spiritual, of the past year, and prayer for their continuance.

Tuesday, 4th.—Humiliation and confession on account of individual, social and national sins.

Wednesday, 5th.—Prayer for the Church of Christ, its unity and purity, its ministry, and for revivals of religion.

Thursday, 6th.—Christian education; prayer for the family, Sunday Schools, and all educational institutions, for Young Men's Christian Associations and for the press.

Friday, 7th.—Prayer for the prevalence of justice, humanity and peace among all nations; for the suppression of intemperance and Sabbath desecration.

Saturday, 8th.—Prayer for Christian missions and the conversion of the world to Christ.

Sunday, 9th.—Theme: On the Ministration of the Holy Spirit.

FROM DEXTER.

Decisive Movement Against Rumsellers—Dramatic and Musical—Christmas.

DEXTER, Dec. 22.

A petition has been circulated here in the past week and quite numerously signed, asking for the appointment of a special officer to enforce the laws for the suppression of the liquor traffic. There is a good deal of rum drank among the young men, and no one can seem to tell where it comes from. It is evidently the intention to root out the nefarious business, if possible.

The Boston Comedy Company, H. Price Webber, manager, opened a week's season here Monday evening, in the play of "Kathleen Mavorneen," which was produced in good style. The company comprises some very good performers, and is worthy the patronage of those who are interested in the drama. The audience was very light, but it will grow better as the season advances. Last year this company was here, and commenced business before very light, audiences, but when they went away they had quite a good business. Next Monday they play in Newport. They have with them a band and orchestra.

The concert, which was given in Town Hall on he 13th, by a quartette, comprising Mrs. R. O. Hobbins, Mrs. E. F. Wasgatt, Mr. J. H. Haynes, and Mr. A. R. Smiley, with Miss Ellen F. Backus and Miss Annie Haynes, pianists, and Prof. R. B. Hall, cornet soloists, was attended by rather a small audience, but the musical critics and best citizens of the place who were present pronounced it, without reserve, the best entertainment ever given in the town. In fact, this was the verdict in all of the places that were visited, and should the company go over the route again, they would draw good houses. It is the general expression that Mrs. Wasgatt, of Bangor, who has been here several times before, never sung so well on any previous occasion. Mr. Haynes met with a flattering reception, as he always does. Mrs. Robbins was at home in a certain sense, and she is always used well by a Dexter audience. Mr. Smiley sung with great acceptance, and made a hit with his solo. He is sure to be heard from hereafter. Miss Backus, piano soloist, is a cultured musician, and a most artistic performer upon her chosen instrument. She contemplates going to Germany in a short time to pursue her studies with the best teachers in the world. Miss Haynes is very young, but yet a skillful accompanist. The people probably got their greatest surprise in the cornet solos by Prof. Hall. There has never been a cornet player in Dexter to be compared with this young artist. He is only twenty-two years of age, and appeared before an audience for the first time but a little over two years since. It is the testimony of critics who listened to his playing, that he is unquestionably the superior of Walter Emerson, and some of them go much further than this in their encomiums. Certain it is that if he lives and continues his studies, he will become one of the most noted performers upon the cornet in the country.

Christmas, and matters incident thereto, are now generally engrossing the attention of the people. The shop-keepers are making most tempting displays of goods in their windows, and pater familias receives numerous suggestions as to his duty in the present crisis.

THE HOLIDAYS.

Our Advertising Patrons.

A. NOYES & CO.

Come to think of it, a first-class stove is not so very bad for Christmas, and any one in need of that necessary article can be accommodated by calling at A. Noyes & Co.'s, on Central street. They can supply you with the handsome parlor stove, or one that will cook your dinner to perfection and make the housekeeper as happy as a lord. If, however, it is a furnace that you are in search of, that very same thing can be obtained right here.

DANIEL WHITE.

It is always a pleasure to visit this store at the holiday season, for we are sure to find no end of pretty things to examine. The establishment of Mr. Snow, on Main street, is filled from cellar to garret with a complete line of first-class goods. A very attentive corps of clerks are always in attendance, and all customers will receive prompt attention.

PLUMBING.

There is nothing particularly suggestive of the holidays in this line of business, but then your water or stove pipes may be out of order, and if so, Messrs. Our readers are too familiar with the members of these firms to need any words of introduction.

WM. F. DICKEY & CO.

This is another hardware establishment where a full line of goods is always to be found. You can here purchase a first-class sled for the boys which, on the whole, is one of the most acceptable presents that we can think of. But right here we would remind the parents that it will be well to can ion the boys to find some secluded street for coasting, as the City Fathers have announced that sliding in the public streets is dangerous and must be stopped.

E. H. BUCK & CO.

At the store of Messrs. E. A. Buck & Co., on Exchange street, can be found a large assortment of boots and shoes. This firm also manufacture a large line of goods at their factory on Columbia street. PICTURES.

A handsome picture is a very nice present, and at C. L. Dakin's, on Main street, can be found an elegant assortment. Mr. Dakin returned from Boston not long since where he selected a full stock of goods for the holiday trade, and having had a long experience in the business, Clarence knows just what will please the public. His store is just now one of the most attractive places in the city and will bear a close inspection.

A. L. BOURNE.

A first-class sewing machine is a necessary article in a well-regulated household, and if any of our readers are not already supplied, we would call their attention to the establishment of Mr. Bourne. He is agent for the Davis Machine, which he claims is unexcelled for first-class work, and will be pleased to exhibit the merits of the machine to any who favor him with a call.

Fairbanks, W. E. Brown, and John S. Kimball & Son.

BOSTON BUTTON STORE.

Notwithstanding the fact that Mr. Tucker has recently embarked in the ice business, he can still be found at the well-known Boston Button Store where, as usual, he has a very large stock of goods. One can find many articles here that will be just the thing for some friend, therefore it will be well to call early and avoid the crowd that congregates at their store daily.

Any one in want of these goods will find an extensive assortment at the stores of William A. Getchell, W. B. Bridges, G. W. Stevens, and S. B. Stone.

A. F. CHASE

J. S. RICKER & CO.

This firm now have one of the most attractive assortment of goods to be found in the city. From one end to the other the counters and shelves fairly groan beneath the weight of handsome china ware in every namable variety, and our readers should certainly make them a call before next Saturday. A person out in search of a holiday present would indeed find it difficult to leave this store without making some purchase, as it contains so many things that we all need.

F. O. WESTON.

If you have an absent friend, a photograph would be a very acceptable present, and at the saloon of Mr. F. O. Weston you can get first-class work done at reasonable rates.

S. D. JONES & SONS.

Any of our gentlemen friends who want a boot or suit of clothes can secure the same at this establishment. Prof. Larkin manipulates the shears at this store, and it would indeed be a strange form that he could not make a suit fit like a glove.

MAJOR BICKFORD.

The Major prides himself on keeping one of the best appointed fish markets to be found in the country, and a call at his place of business will demonstrate that he is not fartlest of the way.

G. W. MERRILL & CO.

The elegant store of G. W. Merrill & Co. now presents a most attractive appearance. They carry a very extensive stock of furniture, and one can always find much to admire here. Where there are so many beautiful goods, it would be folly for us to attempt to enumerate them, therefore we will leave our readers to call and see for themselves. They announce elsewhere that their prices are as low as the lowest.

GEO. B. WIGGIN.

If you have any jewelry that is out of repair, give the above named gentleman a call and he will make it as good as new.

BUZZELL & SHAW.

We will now stop for a moment at the store of Messrs. Buzzell & Shaw, where can be found a full assortment of boots, shoes, hats and caps. They also have a choice assortment of toilet slippers which make a very acceptable present for a gentleman friend and will save the trouble of working a pair.

TICKETS.

After the holidays some of our readers may desire to take a brief trip out of town, and to these we would suggest a call on Fred H. Small, the gentlemanly agent of the Grand Trunk Railway, and A. W. Benson, the Maine Central ticket agent; or if it is a foreign trip you wish to make, W. E. Brown is the gentleman you want to see.

W. F. WHITON & CO.

This firm conduct the carriage manufacturing establishment on Harlow street. Their work is very widely known, both in this city and abroad, as being first-class in every particular. FRANK A. OWEN.

As we announced a few days since, Mr. Owen has taken the agency for the Estey, Geo. Woods & Co. and Bay State Organs, in connection with his other business. These instruments stand very high in musical circles, and Mr. Owen will be pleased to show them to any of his many friends that favor him with a call.

B. S. KALISH.

The jewelry establishment of B. S. Kalish, under the Globe Hotel, contains a handsome assortment of goods from which to select a valuable gift. Mr. K. claims that his prices are down with the lowest, and extends an invitation to our readers to call and see for themselves.

AUCTIONEERS.

Those of our readers who have any real or personal estate that they desire to dispose of at public sale, are referred to Mr. Chas. S. Pearl, or Mr. R. S. Prescott, both of whom are well-known auctioneers.

W. H. EDMUNDS.

At the store of the above named gentleman on Hammond street, will be found a handsome line of watches, clocks, jewelry and plated ware. Mr. Edmunds is also an optician of long experience, and he keeps constantly on hand a carefully selected assortment of optical goods. DOE & MULLAN.

The new store of Doe & Mullan now presents a most attractive appearance in its holiday garb. They have a fine assortment of diamonds, watches, clocks, jewelry, solid silver, and plated ware, and claim that their prices are as low as can be found in the city. Those of our readers who are now looking at Christmas goods should call at this store during the course of their travels.

WARREN & ROBINSON.

These gentlemen still occupy the old stand on the corner of Hammond and Central streets, and have a complete line of drugs. They also keep an assortment of fancy goods from which one can easily select at present that will prove most acceptable.

WOOD, BISHOP & CO.

At this season of the year when your furnace or stove is out of order and needs repairing with a new one, Messrs. Wood, Bishop & Co. will be pleased to receive a call from you. Our reporter dropped into their extensive warerooms, yesterday, and enjoyed a few minutes chat with those connected with the firm, during which he was informed that their business had been excellent this season and that they have nearly disposed of the entire product of their foundry. It will be remembered that their Kohler furnace and new Clarion range, which have heretofore been noticed in these columns, took one of the premiums at the last State Fair. Both the furnace and stove are gaining a deservedly high reputation and the firm are now busy filling back orders. Their Clarion parlor coal stove is also a model of beauty and convenience and is having a large sale. This firm are widely known among commercial men and enjoy a reputation for strict integrity and fair dealing that is unexcelled. They furnish employment for some sixty hands, and distribute a large amount of money among the mechanics of our city.

JOB COLLETT

can still be found at the old stand on Exchange street, where he employs none but the best workmen, and is prepared to execute files in the best possible manner. He also manufactures files at the rate of one hundred and fifty dozen a week and defies the trade at the lowest prices. Now is your time to sharpen up.

HENRY McLAUGHLIN.

Now that the time has nearly arrived when our ice men will commence to harvest their crop, it is essential to begin to examine the stock of ice tools, and if any are wanting, a call at Henry McLaughlin's ware rooms would be about the right thing. He is also an extensive dealer in oils and other goods.

We shall conclude the list to-morrow.

Decision in Law.

The following decision has been received by Ruel Smith, Esq., Clerk of the Eastern Law District:

The husband may gain a new settlement by five years' successive residence in any town without receiving pauper supplies directly or indirectly, though the insane wife may be in the Insane Hospital and supported by the town.

Support furnished an insane wife in the Hospital are not pauper supplies and do not affect the husband's residence, or prevent his gaining a new residence.

The settlement of the wife, (hour) in the Insane Hospital, follows that of the husband, though he may change it during such residence.

A notice describing the insane person as a pauper, but stating that she was supported in the Insane Hospital and correct in other particulars, is not defective by reason of her being called a pauper.

A misdescription of the residence of an insane person in proceedings instituted by the town in the Probate Court, does not constitute any estoppel or prevent the town from contesting her settlement.

The liability of the insane person to remunerate the town committing such person depends on the ability to pay.

The husband is primarily liable for the wife's support, if liable.

The liability of the insane wife to pay for her support does not arise till after the death of the husband, and upon those having or receiving means wherewith to pay.

There is no debt when there is not an ability to pay, and the estate of the insane person is not liable until such ability exists.

MUTATION.

BY MARY B. DODGE.

The soft warm days are dope and autumn's gold
Drops heavy, ripe, overmuch to fruit
Of winter's coming power: the tale is told
Of joyous May, and June more joyous still—
Of summer's sceptred will.

So, our good days, dear friend, are yielding now
Their gladsome light of youth and laughing grace
To Time's compulsion: child-dream, rhythmic vow,
And fair fruition, all are giving place
To wind-strewn range of space.

Yet mark! the sweet damp ground is richer made,
The forest furnished with new bloom, by leaves
That thickly fall. If Love's red berries fade,
Rare wisdom, binding the brown stalks in sheaves,
Her amber interweaves.

'Tis not all loss—the dropping off of good
Which makes more room for better to appear
In nature's two-fold path: bright treasure strewed
For coming feet to press, is gain and cheer
In life's completing sphere.

Then say we never our good days are done—
The good days of our hearts or of the world;
Where under trampled sweets fresh flowers are sown,
And when, of perfumed joys by pain subdued,
A newer strength is brewed.

The season's tourney is with succor rife,
No passion merely crowning hill and mead;
And less shall we be in our sentient strife,
Not glorying in whatever life is bid
Divinely? too forbid. —Home Journal.

OLD VANDERHAVEN'S WILL.

A CHRISTMAS STORY.

A golden summer evening some fifteen years ago. The shadow of the Belfry Tower lay asiant the sunny market-place of the ancient city of Bruges, and the musical chimes fell sweetly on the warm, still, evening air, as they played the Shadow Song from Dinorah.

The old houses which surrounded the place, with their quaint 'step' gables, carved timbers, and deep-set casements, seemed to have fallen asleep in the sunshine, dreaming perhaps of the days when Bruges was one of the centres of the world's commerce; when her haughty burghers lived like princes, and the ministers of twenty nations resided within her walls.

One of the largest and most picturesque of the ancient tenements—formerly the Guild-house of a wealthy corporation—was occupied by M. Nicholas Vanderhaven, who, after a busy and prosperous life as a merchant at Antwerp, had retired to spend the evening of his days in his native city.

On the first floor, looking out on the Market-place, was a spacious apartment which had been the banquet chamber of the Guild, and was now used as a studio by M. Vanderhaven's grandson. No artist could have desired more harmonious surroundings. The room though unfurnished, was a picture in itself; with its painted ceiling, walls panelled in dark polished oak, superb Renaissance chimney-piece, and the sixteenth-century tapestry that hung before the door.

The only occupant of the room this summer evening was Bernhardt Vanderhaven, a handsome, dark-eyed young fellow, with a certain affectation of carelessness, in a quainly-cut velvet blouse and open collar.

He had drawn his easel close to the window to catch the failing light, and was painting industriously, puffing at his cigarette meantime, and only pausing now and then to cast a half-reproachful glance at the darkening sky.

"Yes, it is like her, he muttered; "very like! Just that wistful look in the eyes, and the tender, trustful smile I know so well. My sweet Annette!".

The painting was a half-length portrait of a young girl in the richly picturesque of a noble Flemish lady of the seventeenth century; a girl with a delicate, oval face, only faintly tinted with rose-color; sweet, smiling lips, and softest hazel eyes, which had a dreamy, "out-looking" gaze that gave a touch of spirituality to her beauty. The young man studied every line of the sweet face as if he had never seen it before. So absorbed was he that he did not hear the opening of the door, and started when a familiar voice behind him said, drily: "I fear I am interrupting you, Bernhardt. Shall I come again when you are less occupied?"

"You caught me dawdling for once, grandfather," the young man answered, turning towards the intruder with a pleasant smile; "but I have been working furiously all day, and my picture is nearly finished."

"I am glad to hear it," was the reply, as without even glancing at the canvass, the intruder took his seat on the only chair the room contained, unceremoniously sweeping on to the floor a heap of drapery which encumbered it.

Monsieur Nicholas Vanderhaven was a handsome, vigorous man of seventy, with few signs of age about him, save his silvered hair and the thick, white brows, beneath which his keen eyes glittered "like fire under snow." His chin was square and firm, and his closely shut mouth would have been terribly grim but for some lines about the corners, which showed a gleam of humour and kindliness. His face was a pretty fair index to his character; shrewd, hard, but not unkindly, and capable on occasion of general impulses.

"I am glad to hear it," he repeated. "There has been enough, and rather too much, of dreaming and daubing; it is time you began life in earnest."

Bernhardt raised his brows.

"I thought I had begun it in very serious earnest," he returned, with a half smile, standing with one foot on the rail of his painting stool, and his elbow on his knee. "I have worked hard enough lately to satisfy even you, Monsieur."

"Worked? humph, well—if you call that work. But who is the better for it? What comes of it all?"

"Nothing yet perhaps, but fame and fortune will come of it some day—at least, I hope so," added Bernhardt; "and that hope is my guiding star."

"A will-o'-the-wisp that will lead you into a swamp," was the encouraging comment.

"Come, grandfather, how can you tell what my chances are?" he said good-humoridly; "you never even glance at my pictures. I should be glad if you would, for you are an excellent judge of painting, though you have such a contempt for artists."

"Artists who are worthy the name have my admiration and respect," answered Mr. Vanderhaven deliberately. "I only despise those shallow pretenders who make art an excuse for idleness and affectation; for wearing abnormal coats and beards" (his listener winced slightly); "leading abnormal lives, and being altogether chartered as Bohemians. However, enough of that," he continued. "I want to have a little serious talk with you."

The young artist gave a resigned sort of shrug, and perching himself on his painting-stool, prepared to listen.

"You will be twenty-one on the first of next month," his grandfather began. "You have not forgotten our agreement?"

"No, sir; I have not forgotten. You were to leave me free to follow my own devices till I was of age, then I was to choose between art and commerce; to decide whether I would go on with my painting, or join my cousin in the house at Antwerp, of which you are still the nominal head."

"Exactly. Well?"

"Well—I have chosen art, or rather art has chosen me. She has called, and I must follow, whether she rewards me or not. I am sorry to disappoint you, grandfather, knowing you had set your heart on my entering the firm, but—it is impossible. I should never be a man of business. I am a painter or nothing."

Ominously grim grew his companion's face as he listened, and the lines about his mouth had nothing humorous now, but he replied quietly enough.

"Very good. You are prepared to take the consequences of your decision, I presume?"

"The consequences? I am prepared to work hard and bide my time, if that is what you mean."

"Not quite. Are you prepared to earn your own living? Will your brush find you food to eat, clothes to wear, and a roof to cover you?"

"Well—not yet, perhaps; I haven't tried to sell my pictures; but after a time—"

"After a time, when fame and fortune have found you—just so. Meanwhile, you see, like many another "genius" before you, you stand a chance of starving in a garret."

Bernhardt stared at him in astonishment and dismay.

"I don't understand," he began; "you do not mean—"

"I do not mean to keep you here in luxury and idleness, when you have set my wishes at defiance, upset my plans, and frustrated the ambition of my life."

"What was that?" his grandson interrupted.

"To leave the old firm as I found it, flourishing under the old name, that has been transmitted stainless from father to son for four generations—since the time of our founder, Simon Vanderhaven." And he glanced at an old portrait by the chimney-piece, which seemed to look back at him with sympathy and approval.

"But my cousin Cornelius—" Bernhardt began.

"Your cousin is an excellent manager, and a keen man of business—somewhat too keen, perhaps—but he is not a Vanderhaven. I had hoped that your father would have been my successor, but he is gone before me. You will soon be the last of the old stock."

Bernhardt was silent a moment, looking at his grandfather with compunction and regret. "Grandfather," he faltered, "I did not understand—I did not know you felt it so deeply. I believe me, I am grieved to disappoint you, but—" "Grieve for yourself, rather, if you disobey me," was the sternly-spoken rejoinder. "But I do not accept your decision as final," added M. Vanderhaven as he rose; "I give you to the end of the month to reconsider it."

Bernhardt followed him to the door, and held back the tapestry, looking wistfully into his face.

"It would be easy to decide if I had only myself to think of," he muttered; "but there is Annette—I mean there is someone else who has a right to be considered."

The old gentleman stopped short on the threshold. "A-ah?" he said interrogatively. "And who is Annette, if you please?"

"She is—her name van Elven," he stammered.

"The daughter of that van Elven who died bankrupt a few years ago?"

"Have I said to the contrary? But he died bankrupt, and left his wife and daughter to live on charity—or starve."

"They do neither, Monsieur. Annette maintains herself and her mother by lace-making."

The other made a sort of grimace. "And you propose to make this little lace girl your wife?"

"With your permission, Monsieur."

"Or without it," was the dry addition. "You will ask her advice in the matter we have been discussing, I suppose?"

"I—yes, I shall certainly consult her."

"And let her decide for you," the old merchant recommended, glancing shrewdly at him under his heavy eyebrows. "I will wager she takes my view of the subject when she knows what is at stake. Women are wonderfully clear-sighted and reasonable where their own interests are concerned. I leave my cause with perfect confidence in Mademoiselle Annette's hands." And with an ironical bow and smile he passed over the threshold, and closed the door.

Left to himself the young man paced the room with a face of troubled thought. Yes, Annette would take his grandfather's view of the case, he supposed, though not, as the latter had cynically suggested, from interested motives. It was not poverty she would fear, but the separation which was inevitable if he were cast at once on his own resources. It might be years before he could ask her to share his lot, and he had no right to expect that she should waste her youth in waiting for him. And yet, to give up the one purpose and ambition of his life, to turn his back on the luminous heights that rose before him, and descend to the gray and level plain. It was hard indeed. The sound of the chimes roused him from his troubled reflections. He glanced at his watch. "A quarter to seven! I did not know it was so late. I promised to meet Annette on the Pont du Beguinage at sunset." He put aside his brushes and paletre, and exchanging his blouse for a coat left the house and took his way to one of the innumerable bridges which give the old city its Flemish name. He was first at the trysting-place.

The golden summer evening, the gently flowing water, the softly chiming bells all blended together in a charm that soothed and cheered him. He took out his pocket sketch-book, and was dotting down the outlines of the scene, when the sound of a light footstep made him turn. It was Annette. She did not see him at first, and he watched her as she advanced, glancing about her with her soft, short-sighted eyes. How sweet she looked, he thought, with her pretty, pensive mouth and dreamy eyes; those eyes which had always a shade of tender melancholy, even when her lips smiled, as they did most brightly when he came forward to meet her.

Yes, she was worth any sacrifice, he decided. His mind was made up now as to the course he should take.

"Have I kept you waiting?" she asked, giving him a dainty little hand that a duchess might have envied. "I have been very busy finishing some work. Daylight grows precious after midsummer."

"You try your eyes too much dear," he said, looking at her tenderly. "You know they are not strong, and if you overwork them they may fail you altogether some day."

"Do not suggest anything so terrible," she said with a little shiver, passing her hand over them. "Have you been drawing?" she continued, looking at his sketch-book.

"It is only an outline," he returned, showing it to her.

"The view from here would make a beautiful picture," she remarked; "you must paint it some day, for me."

WEAKNESS AND DISEASES
Such as Consumption, Bronchitis, Asthma, General Debility, Brain Exhaustion, Chronic Constipation, Chronic Diarrhœa, Dyspepsia, or LOSS OF NERVOUS POWER.
Are positively cured by FELLOWS' COMPOUND SYRUP OF HYPOPHOSPHITES.
As phosphorus enters so largely into the animal economy, it becomes par excellence the best vehicle with which to associate the other vitalizing ingredients of healthy Blood, Nerve and Muscle. Fellows' Syrup of Hypophosphites are combined all the substances found necessary to insure robust health, and whenever it was invented with a view to supply every deficiency, it certainly has performed some wonderful cures.
MACHUSETTS, N. H., June 18, 1880
Dear Sir: I wish to acknowledge the great benefit I have received from the use of "Fellows' Compound Syrup of Hypophosphites." I have been an invalid for nearly two years, with a bronchial affection that had become chronic. In the Fall of 1878 I had a physician eighty days in succession, besides the counsel of several others. They gave me but little encouragement, some of them none. Last July I was advised to give your remedy a trial. I did so, and in less than one week there was a marked improvement for the better. I have continued its use from that time until the present, improving all the time, and I can truthfully say I am more than a hundred per cent. better than when I commenced its use. I have increased in weight about fifteen pounds, and my cough which was fearful, has nearly disappeared. I believe had it not been for your Syrup, I should ere this have been beyond the cares of life. Very truly yours,
ALBERT STORY.
Do not be deceived by remedies bearing a similar name, or other preparations in a substituted form under any circumstances.
